State Papers Online Part IV The Stuarts: James I to Anne, 1603-1714: State Papers Foreign, Ireland and Registers of the Privy Council

State Papers Online, 1509-1714, is a groundbreaking new online resource for the study of Early Modern Britain and Europe. Spanning two centuries of the British monarchy the collection reunites State Papers Domestic and Foreign with the Registers of the Privy Council in The National Archives, Kew. This unique series reproduces the original historical manuscripts in facsimile and links each manuscript to its Calendar entry, signifying an enormous advance for scholars of 16th and 17th century politics, society, economic and religious history.

Owing to the scale of the collection - over 2.2 million pages in total - State Papers Online is published in four parts. Parts I and II, combined, cover the State Papers for the Tudor period while Parts III and IV complete the collection for the whole of the Stuart period. Combined, all four parts create an essential backbone for understanding the socio-economic, political and religious issues of the Early Modern world.

State Papers Online Part IV: The Stuarts: James to Anne, 1603 – 1714: State Papers Foreign, Ireland and Registers of the Privy Council
SPO Part IV charts international affairs through the 17th century - one of the most turbulent periods of transition and unrest in British and European history. All the great international themes of the 17th century play out in document after document: marriage alliances, revolutions, wars and treaties, trade and commerce and, crucially, religion. Users can uncover a wealth of primary source documents relaying the details of the international crises of the period - notably the Thirty Years' War, the Great Turkish War, the end of the Dutch Revolt, the disintegration of the Polish-Lithuanian Commonwealth and the English Civil War.

New research paths:

State Papers Online Part IV contains volumes of State Papers from, to and about all the countries of Europe, many of which have lost their own collections of documents from this period. The State Papers are not just essential documents of British History but also of European History.

Researchers can browse and search the letters exchanged between the monarchs and rulers of Europe, Russia and the Ottoman Empire, the reports of ambassadors and members of the trading companies, as well as treaties and other documents of trade. The ambassadors' descriptions of events and conversations at the Courts and capital cities of Europe provide intriguing new insights into the diplomacy, culture and society of the Stuart age. By disclosing European rulers' relationships with each other and offering confidential accounts of court life as seen through the eyes of ambassadors Part IV provides researchers with exciting new in-roads into exploring and understanding 17th C international diplomacy, politics, law, religion, travel, trade and colonial expansion.
